MONSTER PARADE HANDLED BY PHONE

Mountain States Co. Meets Every Demand For Unusual Business Demand.

DENVER, Colo., Aug. 16.—(Special to the Review.)—With over 40,000 men in line General John Chase and his committee of assistants will form and direct the gigantic Knight Templar parade here almost entirely by telephone. A special central switchboard has been installed at concave headquarters and by means of branch telephones at short intervals along the line of march the committee will be kept in direct touch with the movement and progress of the vast army of marching Knights.

Besides the host of Sir Knights who are in attendance at the concave there are over 100,000 visitors in the city, and unusual and careful plans have been prepared for their care and comfort. Special plans have been arranged by the telephone company in anticipation of the great increase in the number of telephone calls during the concave. For months past that company has been busy installing emergency telephones, additional switchboard facilities and training the 150 extra operators who will be required to assist the regular force in handling the calls. Over 250 emergency telephones have been connected with the newspapers and hotels and information bureaus, and at various places along the streets telephones connected with the central exchange have been provided for the convenience of the visitors.

Discussing the telephone preparations for the concave visitors, an official of the Mountain States Telephone company said today: "Emergency services such as this require that we provide facilities far beyond our usual daily need. The present convention with its vast influx of visitors and consequent increase of telephone calls is only a repetition of other conventions we have handled, and will have to handle in the future. Our plant investment has always been, and must always be, sufficient to take care of not only the usual daily business, but the maximum number of calls that come to our switchboards. This is true not only of Denver and other large centers but of each one of our exchanges throughout the territory. Every telephone call must be handled as a unit. The provisions in Denver during the present concave are such that each one of the daily
